Greg is a member of the Logistics, Energy and Manufacturing Litigation Group and the International Trade and National Security team, focusing his practice on transportation, logistics, customs, and trade related issues.

With over 30 years' experience as a trade compliance executive, Greg relies on this background to assist clients on all manner of international trade and customs issues. Greg focuses on customs/international trade, transportation, and logistics issues to address clients' litigation and transactional needs. This includes assisting clients in federal agency investigations related to international trade and customs issues, defending clients in transportation related lawsuits, providing due diligence for a logistics company merger, or drafting client specific language for a new third-party logistics customer agreement. He also represents clients in matters related to commercial construction and real estate, including resolving contractor-subcontractor disputes and verifying the effectiveness of a design professional's standard contract. As a licensed U.S. Customs Broker, Greg assists in addressing customs and trade compliance needs, including product classification evaluation and trade agreement qualification. Greg is admitted to the U.S. Court of International Trade.

Greg's prior work experience includes more than 30 years as a marketing and trade compliance executive, working for two global transportation, forwarding, and logistics companies. Greg also worked three years as a commercial real estate loan officer for a regional New England bank providing financing to clients through acquisition, construction, and development loans.

Greg received his J.D. from Georgia State University. He received his M.B.A. from Columbia University, New York, with concentrations in Finance, Marketing, and International Business. He received his Bachelor of Arts from Boston College with a double major in Romance Languages (French and Italian) and Economics.

Greg is fluent in Italian, French, and Spanish.
