Remarks

The Honorable R. Guy Cole, Jr.
Chief United States Circuit Judge
Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals

8:30 am - Contempt of Court
9:45 am

A century ago, a young black man from East Tennessee was falsely accused of rape and railroaded through the criminal justice system. The judge appointed unqualified lawyers and told them they didn't have to do any work on his case. Those lawyers convinced their client to waive his rights to appeal and accept the death sentence.

The only two African-American lawyers practicing in Tennessee and Georgia stepped forward to file the first federal habeas corpus petition in a state criminal case on his behalf. They convinced the U.S. Supreme Court to intervene, only to have an angry lynch mob burn their homes, chase them out of town and murder their client.

This program chronicles the amazing story of Ed Johnson and his two heroic lawyers – a story buried in dusty old law books for decades and brought to life by lawyer/journalist Mark Curriden.

This historical story features the first lawyers of color to be lead counsel in a case before the Supreme Court. It also showcases the first and only criminal trial ever conducted before the Supreme Court. Experts say this little-known case dramatically reformed the American justice system and redefined the practice of law.

This program exemplifies why lawyers as advocates for the poor and downtrodden are best positioned to take the steps necessary to uphold the rule of law. The program also highlights the role the judiciary plays in protecting the rights of citizens.

2. Discovery of Social Media and Mobile Devices (session repeated Wednesday at 11:10 am)
Music City Center

This TED-style session will cover modern e-discovery from three perspectives: The looming impact of big data; the current challenges brought by social media and mobile devices; and front-line tactics (borrowed from lean manufacturing) to tame the discovery beast. You will gain insight from attorney technologists who are in-the-trenches with these issues every day, but are also thought leaders in these subjects.

3. Current Issues Involving Claims in Bankruptcy
Music City Center

A panel, including a bankruptcy judge, a national bank in-house counsel, and the leader of a large law firm specializing in bankruptcy accounts, will discuss a wide range of current topics relating to claims in bankruptcy – and how to pursue them and defend against objections. Among the issues expected to be covered are: recent amendments to bankruptcy rules involving filing claims; problems arising when mortgage claims are not filed or are deficient; the effect of disallowance of a claim on a lien; late-filed claims, stale claims, amendments to claims, and much more. Changes in the applicable rules, various recent court decisions, problems with the constant selling of claims and transferring of servicing, and the intervention of the government in certain consumer protection areas have all made the bankruptcy claims process a more difficult and uncertain area for judges and lawyers alike. Panelists will provide their insights and guidance on current trends in this area of the law.

3. Civil and Criminal Practice Before United States Magistrate Judges: A Primer (session repeated Thursday at 10:00 am)
Music City Center

Sixth Circuit practitioners in the United States District Courts often ask questions about United States Magistrate Judges, such as: What is a Magistrate Judge, and what is the authority of a Magistrate Judge when ruling in civil and criminal cases? When do Magistrate Judges issue a Report & Recommendation, and when does an Order issue? How do counsel consent to a Magistrate Judge? When do lawyers object and when do they appeal? These and other questions about Magistrate Judge practice will be discussed and answered in this practical, hour-long session co-chaired by U.S. Magistrate Judges James R. Knepp (N.D. Ohio) and Michael J. Newman (S.D. Ohio). Magistrate Judges from throughout the Sixth Circuit will serve as panelists.

2. TVA v. the Snail Darter: The Hidden Story Behind “The Nation’s Most Extreme Environmental Case” \(TVA v. Hill, et al., 37 U.S. 153 \(1978\)\) (session repeated Thursday at 10:00 am)
Music City Center

With the discovery of a tiny endangered fish in the middle of TVA’s plan to build Tellico Dam, the last of 68 dams on the Tennessee River System, 19-years of citizen opposition to the project took on new life. Thanks to the Endangered Species Act of 1973, the snail darter was instantly transformed into both an icon for species preservation and a despised symbol of the environmental movement’s alleged excesses. It’s been called the nation’s “most extreme environmental case ever,” where “hypocritical eco-activists” cynically mis-used a tiny fish of no value to block a huge, $160-million dollar, hydroelectric dam.

The intense legal battle that ensued over the darter’s fate was contested all the way to the Supreme Court. TVA v. Hill, the Court’s first decision interpreting the Endangered Species Act, in 1978, has been recognized as one of the Court’s two most significant environmental law cases. The Supreme Court, intervening in an intragovernmental dispute between the TVA and the Department of Interior, affirmed the 6th Circuit’s injunction prohibiting the TVA from completing Tellico Dam. The case lives on in political discourse as a harsh example of eco-extremism. The actual story, however, may be surprising, including the fact that this last dam was not justified as a hydro project, but rather for land development of an imaginary city, and recreation, condemning 300 family farms primarily for re-sale at agency profit.

*The law professor who, along with his students and Tennessee farmers, fought the congressional battles, and won the Supreme Court case and a Cabinet-level economic review, tells the hidden story behind one of the nation’s most significant environmental law conflicts. See video pre-view: goo.gl/ecQ158; and a book about the saga, THE SNAIL DARTER & THE DAM (Yale Univ. Press).*

- 3. Jury Instructions: Is Anyone Really Listening?
Music City Center

Jury Instructions are an important part of every jury trial, but are they all treated that way? They can be used by lawyers to build the case and present it, and they are used by judges to provide a guide to the jury as to what they should be doing, but are we delivering instructions in the most effective way? Could an increased use of pattern instructions assist judges and lawyers with preparation and reduce the chance of reversible error? Recent research indicates that jury instructions are usually followed by juries, but improvements could be made to make them even more effective. The panel will discuss their effectiveness, ways to make them better and ways lawyers can use instructions throughout the case, not just as the trial starts.

8:30 am - Reentry Courts: "Pull of Gravity"

9:45 am Music City Center

When people hear the term "criminal justice," thoughts of police arrests, prosecutors, defense attorneys, jury trials and prison often come to mind. As law enforcement agencies continue to do more with less in these difficult economic times, it has become increasingly clear that we need to focus on programs that help prevent crime and that will help past offenders reintegrate into our communities as productive citizens. While incarceration serves an important societal goal of keeping dangerous offenders off the streets, the reality is that most offenders eventually return to the community. Without a comprehensive plan which addresses crime prevention and reentry issues, the cyclical nature of crime by repeat offenders will continue.

The panel will discuss the establishment and efficacy of a reentry program in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania in particular, as well as aspects of programs in other jurisdictions. The Eastern District of Pennsylvania program's objectives include preventing recidivism, reducing the high rate of violent crime in the City of Philadelphia, and assisting high-risk returning citizens with multiple social, family, and logistical issues they confront upon their return to society after years in prison. Intensive judicial oversight supplements the Probation Office's supervisory regime, with ongoing input from the Federal Public Defender and the U.S. Attorney.

The most unique aspect of the program is the group dynamic. All participants attend court as a group and are required individually to discuss their accomplishments and identify any obstacles they are encountering in the reentry process. This dialogue leads to the establishment of goals for the participant to achieve before the next court session. If the participant is not complying with the goals of the program or is violating the terms of release, graduated sanctions are imposed and explained to the entire group. Uniform sanctions, access to social services, job opportunities, cognitive behavioral therapy, legal assistance related to collateral issues confronting individuals returning to the community and positive reinforcement are among the tools employed to foster positive changes in behavior and thereby avoid revocation proceedings.

3. Using Chapter 11 to Sell Rather than Reorganize
Music City Center

A panel including a bankruptcy judge, two experienced practitioners, and a financial advisor with expertise in Chapter 11 cases will discuss a wide range of current topics relating to sales of businesses in bankruptcy. Chapter 11 is often used as a mechanism to facilitate sales rather than to reorganize a business, and that has changed the focus of many cases. The panel is expected to discuss topics such as: how fast is too fast to sell substantially all the assets; surviving long enough to sell; trends in effective ways to sell troubled businesses; “stalking horses” and breakup fees; how much notice is enough; what does “free and clear” really mean; successor liability in a bankruptcy sale; selling assets when government approval is involved; attempts to provide releases as part of a sale; and other related topics.
